Justicialismo, a newspaper printed by the Argentine government for the workers and distributed through the Confederacion General del Trabajo (CGT), has two primary objectives: to extol the advantages of the Peron government and to attack Communism. The newspaper does not carry news as such but treats various subjects ranging from labor matters to political and international subjects in an editorial manner. Justicialismo, the first edition of which was published in May 1949, is to be printed once a month for the present and more frequently in the future.
